

CHARLTON'S COAT IS FOUND IN LAKE

correspondence of Ispoloff, seized after the Russian.

Russian Keeps Silent.

Though closely questioned today again, Ispoloff refused to say a word about the mysterious two letters, identical in wording and apparently in hand writing, one of which was found in a conspicuous position in the villa, the other being seized by the authorities after it had been delivered to Ispoloff's address. It had been posted, unstamped, at Moltrasio.

That these letters, addressed to the Russian, told him that the Charltons were about to leave for the Genoa Riviera, because Mrs. Charlton did not like Moltrasio, is added as strong proof by the supporters of the theory that Charlton was killed, too. The Russian's alibi went wrong through chance, say these.

The ashes found in a corner on the stone floor of the villa may have been subjected to a close scrutiny.

Lake Dragged Again.

Determined to unravel the mystery of the murder of Mrs. Mary Scott Castle Charlton the police today began a second dragging of Lake Como and started also to dig up the ground around the Villa Legnazzi, near Moltrasio, which the Charltons occupied.

Not in years has there been a murder in Italy in which the police were so divided in their views as in the Charlton case. This difference of opinion is likely to work against an early solution of the mystery.

Police Belief Divided.

Half the police believe that Charlton is responsible for his wife's death and that he has fled from Italy. The other half believes that Charlton met the same fate as his wife and that Constantine Ispoloff, the Russian suspect, alone holds the key to the murder.

The Como chief of police and United States Consul Caughy at Milan are firm in the belief that Charlton was murdered. The chief of police says that all stories of Charlton having been either cases of mistaken identity or a deliberate plot to mislead the authorities.

The latest of these stories is that the Swiss police traced Charlton to Lucerne, where he is said to have arrived Saturday, and there lost all trace of him. If Charlton reached Lucerne on Saturday, it is conceded that he probably has made good his escape.

The police are confused by tips that poured into headquarters today from Italian and other European cities that men answering Charlton's description have been seen in these cities.

Russian a Shrewd Person.

Ispoloff is proving one of the craftiest prisoners ever questioned by the Italian police. The best detective talent in Milan and Rome have tried to break down his story that the last he saw of the Charltons was on Saturday, June 4, at least a day before the murder was committed, but have failed utterly.

The statement of M. Bassi, a druggist of Cernobbio, that he lent a pair of brass "knucks" to Ispoloff was expected to bring startling developments, but the prisoner refused to show any embarrassment when confronted with this bit of evidence, and calmly insisted that Bassi was mistaken.

The police say it is possible that the wounds in Mrs. Charlton's head could have been produced by these "knucks," but they hardly think it probable. The wounds were fearful bruises, rather than cuts, such as the "knucks" would probably have produced. This leads the police to adhere to their original theory that a club or some other blunt instrument was the weapon used.

FLOATS IN EMPYREAN ON WINGS OF FANCY

John Mason Jones In Our Midst With Flyer, Built on Paper, Which May Make Wrights and Hamiltons
Look Like Miniature Dr. Cooks.

By JAMES HAY, Jr.

It can not plunge into ocean's vasty depths in search of priceless pearls, for can it, with accurate and meticulous accent, conjugate a Greek verb.

But, with these exceptions, its possibilities are practically unlimited. It is more than amphibious. It can travel by land or on sea or in the air.

It is the remarkable airship invented by John Mason Jones, of New York.

The only blot on this beautiful picture is that the extraordinary craft has not yet been built except on paper. John Mason Jones has constructed it in the workshop of his soaring imagination, and he has ridden in it with the help of the glittering wings of fancy. John Mason Jones is in Washington today to see whether or not this beneficent and generous Government will contribute a small sum toward building the ship. He believes the War Department could use it with advantage to the country and credit to John Mason Jones.

On paper, this new conqueror of the air looks like a wheelbarrow completely surrounded by hollow and unpeeling balloons, sausages. There are two sausages strung up on the masts, and a group of little sausages at prow and stern. The air, striking the hollow of the funnel-like sausages, will be the kind, ministering agency which will lift the ship to realms ethereal.

John Mason Jones is a philanthropist. When the bill introduced by Senator Hankhead, but now apparently stuck against one of the bulkheads of legislation, passes into law and the Government builds the ship, John Mason Jones will see everybody rushing off to build airships like his. John Mason Jones will not scorn to ride in his own craft. On the contrary, he will give at least one trip of demonstration, a trial spin, so to speak, which may make the Wright brothers look like a cheap song-and-dance team in vaudeville, and to prove that Curdas, Hamilton, Elbert, and all the rest of the sky explorers are miniature Doctor Cooks.

Seated smilingly in his contrivance that can travel anywhere it it once gets a start, John Mason Jones may have a look at the canals on Mars, light his cigar on the burning sun, trail through his outstretched fingers the glowing beauties of the Milky Way, and, with protruding foot, kick the twinkling stars into cock-eyed sleep. He will bring back the moon and make it into moonstone, and start dust will be as cheap as brick dust.

The only trouble about the prospect is that, once started into the empyrean, John Mason Jones may never come back. Some envious man may reach out from a circling satellite and catch him by some lovely woman may stick a batpin into those bologna sausages as they graze the edges of a yet undiscovered world. It may be remembered that centuries ago a venturesome guy with waxen wings got too close to the sun, and was hurled headlong into the sea.

But no such fears come to trouble the thoughts of John Mason Jones. He hopes and trusts. Anyone who can fly on paper finds no trouble in soaring to confidence.

John Mason Jones is about to sail away.

OKLAHOMA CITY NOW STATE CAPITAL

Governor Preparing to Issue Proclamation Despite Court's Action.

OKLAHOMA CITY, June 12.—After a series of events, during which the daughter of Gov. C. N. Haskell was mobbed, the State's chief executive is established here today and Oklahoma City is, therefore, ipso jure the capital of the State. Governor Haskell is prepared to issue a proclamation declaring this the capital.

The governor has practically established Oklahoma City as his permanent headquarters, although he declines to say whether he will attempt to remove the records of his office to Oklahoma City in the face of the injunction issued by Judge Huston in the district court at Guthrie.

"You may say," he simply observed, "that the official business of the State of Oklahoma will be transacted in Oklahoma City."

It is more than likely that any one who attempts to remove the records of the governor's office at Guthrie will be cited before the district court on a charge of contempt.

FESTIVAL OF "SHABUOTH" OBSERVED THIS MORNING

Special Confirmation Services Held At Temple of the Washington Hebrew Congregation—Special Anniversary Sermon Preached Last Night.

The festival of "Shabuoth" was observed with special confirmation services at the temple of the Washington Hebrew Congregation at 9:30 this morning.

The services were opened with a professional prayer by the post-confirmation class and choir, which was followed by a confirmation prayer by Rabbi Stern; next in order came the confirmation hymn, an opening prayer by Lorraine Sommers, then followed the service of the scrolls.

The symbolism of flowers represented by little children was used to supplant the ancient idea of symbolizing animals. Tributes were offered by Minnie Weil, Hazel Bornheim, Esther Stern, M. Eugene Powdermaker, Lotta Karples, and Mrs. N. W. Shurcliffe. In the consecration service a declaration of faith was given by the class led by Lester Steinhilber, which was followed by the presentation of Bibles by the Rev. Dr. Abram Simon, and a violin solo by Master Ralph Goldsmith. Dr. Simon pronounced the rabbi's blessing, Miss Ida Wolf offered the closing prayer, and the program ended with a hallelujah chorus by the choir.

Dr. Simons, assisted by Rabbi Stern, conducted the confirmation service, the following children being confirmed: David Blum, Nathan Blum, Hazel Bornheim, Pauline Cohen, Lotta Karples, Julia K. Kohner, M. Eugene Powdermaker, Esther Stern, Lorraine Sommers, Lester H. Steinhilber, Minnie Weil, and Ida Wolf.

Special services were also held last night at the temple when Rev. Dr. Simon preached an eloquent sermon commemorating the anniversary of the founding of the Hebrew religion, and the celebration of the writing of the Ten Commandments. The special music by the choir was beautiful and appropriate.

ANTI-CLERICAL PARADE.

ROME, June 12.—The anti-clerical demonstration, which was postponed from June 5, was held yesterday at Trastevere. Four thousand socialists, Republicans and Radicals paraded after violent speeches had been made, but they dispersed without doing any harm.

INCENDIARY FIRES ST. MARY'S CHURCH

YORK, Pa., June 12.—Fire at an early hour this morning started in the sacristy of beautiful St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, and it was only by the timely discovery by Roy Weigle, who gave the alarm, that saved the edifice, and other surrounding buildings. The sacristy and portions of the church were ruined. The fire was of incendiary origin.
